In March 1922 Gandhi was arrested and sentenced to six years of imprisonment. He was released on January 12, 1924, before the expiration of his term. This earlier noncooperation movement was confined largely to men and was less extensive than the satyagraha [literally "truth-force," referring to the nonviolent resistance approach developed by Gandhi] movement of 1930-32. Women were expected to participate in processions and attend all Congress meetings, however, so with mother and my two older sisters, Chandra and Janak, I used to join all such functions. I would like my readers to visualize the restricted life women led, even in a province as progressive as the Punjab. Women hardly ever ventured beyond four walls of their homes, except to visit relatives or to attend a religious festival. My mother's aunt always wore a shawl over her sari when she went visiting. I suppose that could be considered as a sort of Hindu burqa [cloak worn by secluded women] although her face was left uncovered. In that atmosphere, for the women to leave their homes and walk in a procession was a big step forward.

The present footwear, chappals [sandals], had just come into fashion, and women unused to walking any distance in a disciplined manner found if extremely difficult to walk in their chappals. The chappals would come off as the women walked in procession. They could not pause to put them on again and usually continued walking barefoot in the procession. Mother had two Congress volunteers walk behind the women. Their job was to pick up any odd chappal left behind, put it in a cloth bag, and bring it to the office of the District Congress Committee at Pari Mahal, where the procession usually terminated. The women would reclaim their footwear then go home. This was the training period. Later, these women would come into their own and storm the citadels of the mighty British Empire.

Women have not only worked but fought. I know personally of an instance in which the female population of a village in the Hainan Island fought off a small Japanese landing made when their menfolk were away. They had only farm implements to fight with, and many were killed, but the enemy force was compelled to reembark. Similar happenings must have occurred in a great many places throughout the country, unheralded and unknown. As for individual cases, there is a story in almost every district of some girl who, emulating Mu Lan [the fifth-century Chinese Heroine who masqueraded as a male in order to take her ill father's place as a soldier on the frontier of old], changed into men's clothing and fought the army.

The fighting record of our women does not permit us to believe that they will ever again allow themselves to be enslaved whether by a national enemy or by social reaction at home. Only an extension of democracy, including the rights of women, can bring real victory in this war. Such a victory, won by the united efforts of the people, will leave no room for any scheme of things other than democracy.

When the victory over aggression is achieved, Chinese women will stand with the women of all countries, as those who have suffered much more than even the men in the mad revel of fascism and war that has spread throughout the world, ready and willing to see that in the future all movement shall be forward, that the earth's present frightful testing-time shall be the last of its kind.

The woman, given by the Creator, the right to vote for the successor to the prophet, is deprived of the right to vote for a deputy in a circuit or district election by a [male] being created by God. At the same time, this right is enjoyed by a man who might have less education and experience than the woman. And she is the mother who has given birth to the man and has raised him and guided him. The Sharia [Islamic law] gave her the right to education, to take part in the hijra [referring to the time of the Prophet Muhammad and his flight from Mecca to Medina], and to fight in the ranks of the warriors and has made her equal to the man in all rights and responsibilities, even in the crimes that either sex can commit. However, the man who alone distributes rights, has kept for himself the right to legislate and rule, generously turning over to his partner his own share of responsibilities and sanction without seeking her opinion about the decision. The woman today demands to regain her share of rights that have been taken away from her and gives back to the ma the responsibilities and sanction he has given her.

If we construct a society without exploitation of man by man, then of course women will be free in that society. Our struggle for national liberation is one way of assuring the liberation of women because by doing the same work as men, or by doing work that ensures the liberation of our country, a woman will convince herself that she is able to do the same work as men. In the process, women will learn that they are able to do many things they could not have conceived of before. They will learn that in our party there are women in the highest level of leadership and that women are working in all different sectors of our lives. This is important because it convinces women that they have potential and shows men what that potential is.

Source: Marie-Aimée Helie-Lucas, participant in the Algerian War of Independence (1954-1962) waged against French colonial rule, paper presented to the International Symposium on Women and the Military System, Siunto Baths, Finland, 1987.

So much for Fanon's [Frantz Fanon, author of The Wretched of the Earth and other writings on the experience of the colonized] and others' myth of the Algerian woman liberated along with her country. The liberated women were in the kitchen, they were sewing clothes (or flags?), carrying parcels, typing. Nevertheless, since there was "no humble task in the revolution" we did not dispute the roles we had. It would have been mean to question the priority of liberating the country, since independence would surely bring an end to discrimination against women. What makes me angrier in retrospect is not women's confinement but the brainwashing that did not allow us young women even to think of questioning. What makes me angrier still is to witness the replication of this situation in other struggles for independence. It angers me to see women covering the misbehavior of their fellow men and hiding, in the name of national solidarity and identity, crimes which will be perpetuated after independence.

unit 8 questions

This is the real harm which comes with liberation struggles. The overall task of women during liberation is seen as symbolic. Faced with colonization the people have to build a national identity based on their own values, traditions, religion, language and culture. Women bear the heavy burden of safeguarding this threatened identity. And this burden exacts its price.

Historical Background: The rise of nationalist movements and the modern nation-state has affected women's political and economic participation and social freedoms.

Based on the documents, analyze the opportunities and barriers that nationalist movements posed concerning women's rights in the twentieth century. Identify and explain what additional type of document(s) or sources would help assess the impact of nationalism on women's rights.

In your response, you will be assessed on the following.

- Respond to the prompt with a historically defensible thesis or claim that establishes a line of reasoning.
- Describe a broader historical context relevant to the prompt.
- Support an argument in response to the prompt using all but one of the documents.
- Use at least one additional piece of specific historical evidence (beyond that found in the documents) relevant to an argument about the prompt.
- For at least three documents, explain how or why the document's point of view, purpose, historical situation, and/or audience is relevant to an argument.
- Use evidence to corroborate, qualify, or modify an argument that addresses the prompt.

2. Use the following two images to answer all parts of the question that follows.

a. Identify ONE common historical process in the twentieth century that is reflected in both images.

b. Explain ONE difference in the tactics individuals such as Gandhi and Che Guevara (or the groups they represent) adopted to achieve their political goals.

c. Explain ONE way in which images such as these can be seen as an example of the political uses of art in the twentieth century.

Part A, B, C

unit 8 questions

Question-Specific Scoring Guide

• ONE point for identifying one common historical process in the twentieth century that is reflected in both images

• ONE point for explaining one difference in the tactics individuals such as Gandhi and Che Guevara (or the groups they represent) adopted to achieve their political goals

• ONE point for explaining one way in which images such as these can be seen as an example of the political uses of art in the twentieth century

Scoring Notes

Examples of responses to part (a) that would earn credit:

• Both images reflect attempts to achieve national self-determination. Mohandas Gandhi led the movement for India's independence from Great Britain, and Che Guevara sought to overthrow United States-dominated governments in Latin America.

• Both images reflect increasing challenges to the Western-dominated global political order, as Gandhi sought to end British domination in India and Guevara sought to free Latin America of United States influence.

• Both images reflect anticolonial movements that protested against Western economic domination and advocated for more equitable distribution of wealth.

Examples of responses to part (b) that would earn credit:

• While both Mohandas Gandhi and Che Guevara wanted to end foreign influence in their respective states, Gandhi sought to retain popular support among India's social classes and religious groups by advocating a traditional view of society in which women were subservient to men, whereas Guevara and other communist guerilla movements sought popular support by advocating economic and gender equality.

unit 8 questions

• Gandhi employed economic pressure and nonviolence to influence change in British India, while Guevara used and promoted violent guerilla warfare as the best means to overthrow United States–backed regimes in Latin America.

• Gandhi emphasized Indian nationalism and acquired broad support among India's social classes, while Guevara based his rhetoric on Marxism and appealed to the lower classes in Latin America.

Examples of responses to part (c) that would earn credit:

• Art allows political leaders to reach largely illiterate populations and thereby widen their base of support.

• The depiction of revolutionary leaders as self-sacrificing participants in the struggle against foreign domination were meant to inspire a sense of nationalism and loyalty to the leader and the cause.

• The image of Che Guevara in a military uniform with eyes focused ahead serves as a call to fight reminiscent of political propaganda used during the First and Second World Wars.

0	1	2	3 ✓

Score 3

Response accomplishes all three tasks set by the question.

3. In your response, be sure to address all parts of the question. Use complete sentences; an outline or bulleted list alone is not acceptable.

Answer all parts of the question that follows.

a) Explain ONE process that led to the emergence of new states in the second half of the twentieth century.

b) Identify ONE example in which the creation of a new state led to large-scale population movements after 1945.

c) Explain ONE way in which the legacy of imperialism affected the economic development of new states in the second half of the twentieth century.

Response accomplishes all three of the tasks set by the question.

☐ Task A: Explain ONE process that led to the emergence of new states in the second half of the twentieth century.
The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary. Some examples that would earn credit include:
· Decolonization was a process that led to the emergence of new states in the second half of the twentieth century because states in Africa and Asia gained independence from colonial powers such as Britain and France.
· The emergence of nationalist, religious, and ethnic movements in Africa and Asia led to the creation of

unit 8 questions

new states because they helped end colonial rule.

· The spread of communism in Asia led to the creation of new states on either side of the ideological divide, such as North and South Korea and the People's Republic of China and Taiwan.

· The collapse of the Soviet Union in the late twentieth century led to the creation of new states in the Baltic region, the Caucasus, and Central Asia.

Task B: Identify ONE example in which the creation of a new state led to large-scale population movements after 1945.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary. Some examples that would earn credit include:

· The creation of Pakistan following the partition of India led to large-scale population movements by Muslims and Hindus.

· The creation of the state of Israel led to the immigration of European Jews and the displacement of large numbers of Palestinians.

· The creation of Bangladesh in the early 1970s led to large-scale population movements as many Hindus and Muslims fled to India.

Task C: Explain ONE way in which the legacy of imperialism affected the economic development of new states in the second half of the twentieth century.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary. Some examples that would earn credit include:

· The legacy of imperialism affected the economic development of new states because many new states took a stronger role in guiding economic policy and often nationalized industries in order to weaken the influence of Western states and companies in their national economies.

· The legacy of imperialism affected economic development in new states because Western European companies often retained considerable economic power.

· The legacy of imperialism persisted because economic development and trade relationships established under imperial rule often tended to dictate the economic development of postcolonial states, such as Algeria.

· Economic development in new states was affected by migration to colonial metropoles. These migrations could either hurt new states' economies because of the loss of potential skilled workers, intellectuals, and government officials, or it could help those economies if those migrants returned and brought with them skills that could help their national economies develop.

unit 8 questions

"It was my privilege to attend the All African People's Conference held in Ghana. The conference was significant because it brought together the most representative gathering of African leaders ever assembled. There were about 300 delegates representing some 65 organizations coming from 28 African countries. Of the nine independent African countries only one, Sudan, was not represented.

The nationalist organizations were represented by their top leadership. Therefore, whether the colonial powers like it or not, the decisions of the conference must be taken with some seriousness. The conference announced clearly that African freedom and independence are a necessity, and that the struggle to achieve independence would continue. The conference's declaration on colonialism and imperialism significantly called upon 'the independent African states to render maximum assistance by every means possible to the dependent peoples in their struggle.' The final decision of the conference was to commend nonviolent methods but also to endorse other methods if they are deemed necessary.

Presently, there is negligible Russian influence in Africa. Nevertheless, this influence will grow unless the problem of racism in the multi-racial areas of Africa is solved. It is my opinion that American influence will decline steadily unless the United States is much more vocal in its support of responsible movements for independence in Africa. The United States does not need to be as cautious as it currently is."

George M. Houser, president of the American Committee on Africa, a nongovernmental organization founded to support nonviolent African independence movements, report about the All African People's Conference held in Ghana, 1958

4. The conference as described in the first and second paragraphs is best explained in the context of which of the following developments in the aftermath of the Second World War?

(A) The development of regional free-trade agreements

(B) The intensification of ethnic rivalries in Africa

(C) The spread of industrial methods of production

(D) The dissolution of European empires ✓

Answer D

Correct. The conference is best explained in the context of the dissolution of European empires following the Second World War. The Second World War weakened European control over African and Asian colonies and led to the dissolution of European empires, largely because Great Britain and France were so devastated economically and physically during the Second World War that they could no longer afford to maintain their vast empires intact and had to allow certain colonies to become independent. Nationalist leaders in Africa and Asia recognized this weakness and applied economic, military, and diplomatic pressure on European states to relinquish the remainder of their colonies.

5. The conference's decision to "endorse other methods," as mentioned in the second paragraph, is best explained in the context of which of the following?

unit 8 questions

(A) The growth of the international arms trade provided armed groups in Africa with military superiority over European powers.

(B) Many African colonies had failed to obtain the greater self-governance promised after the First World War and doubted that European powers would fulfill similar promises after the Second World War. ✓

(C) Many African societies had been strongly influenced by European methods of administration, economic and political philosophy, and culture.

(D) The Non-Aligned Movement was attractive to many African societies that opposed both European policies in Africa and the development of a bipolar global order.

Answer B

Correct. European colonial powers justified the creation of the mandate system after the First World War as part of a process of preparing African states for self-government but had made few moves to grant African nations their independence. As a result, some African nationalists contended that further pressure on European governments through military force was necessary to achieve independence.

6. The author's opinion in the third paragraph regarding the caution that the United States was employing in supporting African independence movements is most directly explained in the context of which of the following developments in the immediate aftermath of the Second World War?

(A) The United States had vastly more economic and military power than its European allies. ✓

(B) The United States and the Soviet Union preferred to engage in proxy wars rather than in direct conflict.

(C) The United States used its influence in international organizations to rally support for its policies in Third World nations.

(D) The United States used its intelligence agencies to overthrow regimes in Third World nations.

Answer A

Correct. Shortly after the Second World War, the United States possessed nearly 50 percent of the world's gross domestic product (GDP) and possessed a military that dwarfed that of any of its European allies. In addition, United States military support was essential for protecting Western European states against potential Soviet military aggression. Hence, Houser's contention that the United States did not need to be so cautious in supporting African independence movements most likely reflects his belief that the United States alliances with European states would not fracture because European nations would remain militarily and economically dependent on the United States.

SOUTH AFRICAN ANTIAIRCRAFT UNIT IN ANGOLA, FIGHTING ON THE SIDE OF THE ANTICOMMUNIST NATIONAL UNION FOR THE TOTAL INDEPENDENCE OF ANGOLA (UNITA) DURING THE ANGOLAN CIVIL WAR, CIRCA 1980

Fred Bridgland / Casemate Publishers / mediadrumworld.com

7. Which of the following developments or processes in the late twentieth century best explains the participation of foreign troops in the Angolan Civil War, as shown in the two photographs?

(A) The creation of the Non-Aligned Movement

(B) The proliferation of Cold War proxy conflicts ✓

(C) The global campaign against apartheid in South Africa

(D) The emergence of ideologically driven movements advocating violence against civilians

Answer B

Correct. The two photographs show soldiers from communist Cuba and the Western-aligned South African Republic participating in the Angolan Civil War. To avoid direct conflict that could lead to a nuclear war, the United States and the Soviet Union used their respective allies, in what are referred to as proxy conflicts, to help fulfill their ideological and political objectives.

unit 8 questions

8. The confrontation illustrated in the two photographs can be seen as a specific example of the global rivalries in the period after 1945 that also directly produced which of the following?

(A) The NATO and Warsaw Pact military alliances ✓

(B) The Arab-Israeli conflicts

(C) The Hutu-Tutsi ethnic tensions that led to the Rwanda genocide

(D) Regional economic cooperation blocs, such as the EEC, ASEAN, and Mercosur

Answer A

Correct. The NATO and Warsaw Pact military alliances formed directly in response to Cold War tensions between anticommunist states in Western Europe that were supported by the United States and communist satellite states in Eastern Europe supported by the Soviet Union. NATO formed as a result of United States attempts to protect Western Europe from a potential Soviet attack, while the Warsaw Pact in Eastern Europe formed under Soviet leadership to counter the threat posed by NATO.

9. Which of the following developments in the period after 1945 most directly prevented localized conflicts such as the one illustrated in the two photographs from escalating into global wars?

(A) The threat of the use of nuclear weapons ✓

(B) The effectiveness of the United Nations as a global guarantor of collective security

(C) Recurring economic downturns, such as the one following the 1973 OPEC oil embargo

(D) The threat of communist revolutions breaking out in the industrialized countries of the West

Answer A

Correct. The potential for mutually assured destruction through the use of nuclear weapons prevented direct conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union during the Cold War. Hence, although the United States and the Soviet Union often placed considerable economic and military resources into localized proxy wars like the Angolan Civil War and saw those conflicts as essential to achieving their respective geopolitical and ideological objectives, they avoided direct conflict with each other.

unit 8 questions

"Throughout the period of Nigeria's short and precarious existence as a single political entity, we Eastern Nigerians have always believed in fundamental human rights as they are accepted and enjoyed in civilized countries. Impelled by our belief in these rights and our sense of common citizenship with other Nigerians, we contributed our ideas and skills, our resourcefulness and dynamism, in the development of areas of Nigeria outside the East. We set up businesses and industries throughout the country, overlooked the neglect of our homeland in the division of national institutions, development projects, and financial resources, made our region's abundant natural resources available to the rest of the country, and confidently invested in the general economic and social development of Nigeria. . . .

We used to oppose those who told us that what our former colonial masters made into 'Nigeria' was merely an agglomeration of different peoples, distinct in every way except in the color of their skin, and organized in as a unit solely for the commercial interests and administrative convenience of the colonists. . . .

But we have come to realize that national unity is no longer possible. The Nigerian constitution that was adopted after independence in 1960 installed the North in perpetual dominance over Nigeria. Thus were sown, by design or by default, the seeds of factionalism and hate, of struggle for power, and the worst type of political deception. National independence was followed by successive crises, each leading to the near disintegration of the country. Last year alone, tens of thousands of Eastern and Southern Nigerians were killed in pogroms by Northerners in all parts of the country, including the capital, Lagos. We are now facing a situation in which there are only two possible outcomes: either perpetual domination of the rest of the country by the North, not by consent but by force and fraud, or a dissolution of the [Nigerian] federation bond."

Lieutenant Colonel C. Odumegwu Ojukwu, Nigerian army officer, proclamation of the breakaway Republic of Biafra [Eastern Nigeria], 1967

10. Which of the following best explains Lt. Colonel Ojukwu's purpose in including the information in the first paragraph in his independence proclamation?

(A) He wanted to emphasize the continued economic exploitation of Nigeria by Western global capitalism.

(B) He wanted to convince Nigeria's elected government to compensate Eastern Nigerians for the economic sacrifices they had made in building the country.

(C) He wanted to advocate for a pan-African solution to the continent's pressing economic and social problems.

(D) He wanted to outline a list of East Nigerian grievances in order to justify the political action he was about to take. ✓

Answer D

Correct. Lt. Colonel Ojukwu wanted to outline Eastern Nigerian grievances in order to justify rebelling against the Nigerian government to fight for the independence of Eastern Nigeria.

11. Which of the following best explains how the immediate historical situation of the proclamation of Biafran independence from Nigeria informed the author's statements in the third paragraph?

unit 8 questions

(A) Explicitly seeking the support of one of the two superpowers was the expected course of action from most new national governments in Asia and Africa.

(B) Claiming to uphold the rule of law and oppose government corruption had become the norm for those seeking political power, even for military leaders seeking to challenge elected governments. ✓

(C) Presenting their struggle as one against European imperialism was the best way for leaders of African and Asian states to justify their corrupt practices.

(D) Adopting the principles of the Non-Aligned Movement allowed many leaders of new states in Asia and Africa to remain above the proxy conflicts of the Cold War.

Answer B

Correct. Lt. Colonel Ojukwu's listing of the Biafran grievances against the Northern-dominated federal government of Nigeria directly demonstrates that even as a military leader seeking to challenge or overturn an elected government, he feels compelled to invoke the rhetoric of upholding the rule of law and embracing the principles of good government.

12. Based on the author's point of view, it is most likely that the information presented in the passage

(A) understates the economic contributions Eastern Nigerians had made to the unified Nigerian state

(B) inadvertently misrepresents the extent of regional differences and identities in Nigerian society

(C) glosses over the responsibility of corrupt politicians in creating the problems facing the unified Nigerian state

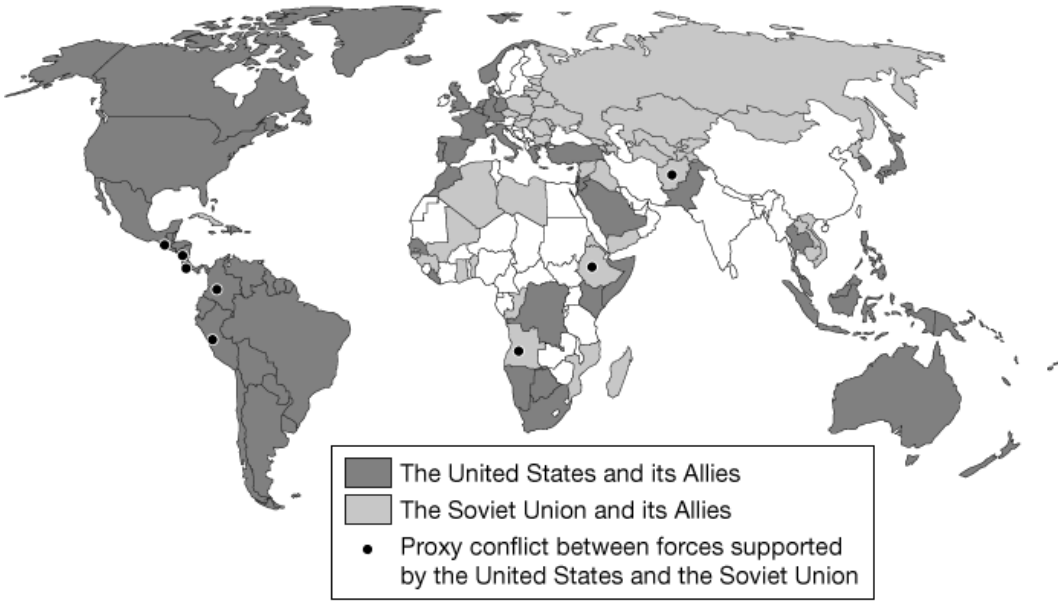
(D) overstates the extent to which Northern Nigerians were responsible for undermining the united Nigerian state ✓

Answer D

Correct. Because Lt. Colonel Ojukwu was advocating for the use of force to separate Eastern Nigeria from the rest of the country, he most likely presented information that overstated the extent to which Northern Nigerians were responsible for undermining the united Nigerian state.

unit 8 questions

WORLD POLITICAL MAP, 1980



13. The global balance of power, alluded to on the map, best reflects which of the following changes in the mid-twentieth century?

(A) The ability of the United States and the Soviet Union to develop economic policies that protected them from the worst effects of the Great Depression

(B) The disintegration of imperial states such as the Ottoman and Austro-Hungarian Empires following the First World War

(C) The military and economic decline of Western European colonial empires following the Second World War ✓

(D) The United States and Soviet Union's control over international financial institutions such as the International Monetary Fund

Answer C

Correct. As Western European military and economic power declined after the Second World War, the Soviet Union and the United States became the world's superpowers, and most states around the world allied with one or the other power, as the map illustrates.

14. Which of the following likely explains the political positions of most of the nonaligned Asian and African states shown on the map?

unit 8 questions

(A) As former colonial territories, they were wary of being dominated by another foreign power. ✓

(B) As former large empires, they admired the territorial ambitions of the United States and the Soviet Union.

(C) As states that had populations with deeply traditional values, they were uninterested in ideological debates between capitalists and communists.

(D) As states with extensive natural resources, they wanted to grant free-trade privileges to all nations.

Answer A

Correct. Because of their past histories as colonial territories under European rule, nonaligned states such as India and Ghana were wary of becoming too closely allied with either the United States or the Soviet Union, two nations that frequently used their economic and military power to overthrow governments and shape the economic and foreign policies of other states.

15. Which of the following best explains why the United States and the Soviet Union preferred to engage in the type of conflicts shown on the map?

(A) To maintain control over their former colonial states through puppet governments

(B) To avoid direct military confrontations that could lead to nuclear war ✓

(C) To obtain new military technology before a direct confrontation

(D) To acquire natural resources by forcing states to favor United States or Soviet companies

Answer B

Correct. Because both powers controlled nuclear weapons, direct military conflict might result in nuclear war, which had the potential to destroy both nations entirely. Therefore, they engaged in proxy conflicts all over the world to increase their power and influence.

16. All of the following contributed to the end of the political order depicted on the map EXCEPT

(A) the expansion of United States military spending

(B) the unsuccessful Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan

(C) continued economic weakness in the Soviet Union following Gorbachev's reforms

(D) armed rebellions in Eastern European states against Soviet rule ✓

unit 8 questions

Answer D

Correct. While Eastern European states did protest against Soviet rule in the late 1980s, and their protests undoubtedly played an important part in the fall of the Soviet Union, these protests were not armed rebellions but predominately peaceful demonstrations.

"Africa was the last region to break the bondage of colonialism. It was not until [after] World War II that most African countries achieved independence.... Many African countries became pawns in the Cold War's division of the world, and social and economic development took second place to issues related to national security policies of Western countries.

Africa's boundaries were drawn arbitrarily at the Berlin Conference of 1884–85 when Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Portugal, Germany, and Spain [ignored] a thousand indigenous cultures and superimposed a new map that supported the economic desires of the imperial powers. Colonial powers were interested in extracting resources, not building schools, infrastructure and public institutions. Often, colonial leaders treated their 'subjects' as subhuman."

17. Which of the following is an argument made by the authors in the first paragraph regarding the Cold War?

(A) Many countries joined the Non-Aligned Movement to avoid making alliances with the superpowers.

(B) The United States and the Soviet Union attempted to expand their empires by conquering territories in Africa.

(C) Global competition between the superpowers interfered with the advancement of newly independent countries in Africa. ✓

(D) The proliferation of nuclear weapons threatened the existence of African countries.

Answer C

Correct. The authors contend Western governments prioritized Cold-War security over African economic and social development.

18. The events described in the first paragraph were part of which of the following broader historical processes?

unit 8 questions

(A) After the Second World War, the United States assisted many nations with their rebuilding efforts.

(B) Many former European colonies achieved self-government either peacefully or through armed resistance. ✓

(C) The Soviet Union implemented oppressive policies to exert greater control over its population.

(D) Improvements in transportation and communication technologies contributed to the globalization of the world economy.

Answer B

Correct. The authors note Africa was "the last region to break the bond of colonialism," referring to the wave of post-1945 decolonization that dismantled European empires across the continent.

19. In China between 1958 and 1962, Mao Zedong's Great Leap Forward, an effort to make China an industrial power through mass collectivization of agriculture, is best understood as an example of

(A) an attempt by China to win favor with policy makers in the United States

(B) a free-market policy designed to position China as a major power in a globalizing economy

(C) market communism in which the state increasingly cedes control to businesses run by Communist Party associates

(D) a communist government exerting control over the national economy ✓

"It seems that the only way we have of opposing totalitarianism is to reject its lies and start living the truth. Of course, to oppose the government in a society such as ours is very different from opposing a democratic government in an open society. In a repressive society such as ours dissent must start first on the level of individual thinking and conscience, rather than actual political action. The power of our opposition to the Communist regime is, for now, a potential power, which is hidden throughout the whole of society. But once enough members of society have joined our ranks, then this potential power can spring forth (when, where, and under what circumstances it is difficult to predict) into something visible: a real act of political protest, a social movement, a sudden explosion of civil unrest. This is why the regime persecutes dissidents for even the most modest attempts to tell the truth.

Why was Solzhenitsyn* driven out of his own country? Certainly not because he wielded any real power or because any of the regime's representatives felt he might unseat them and take their place in government. No—Solzhenitsyn's expulsion was a desperate attempt to plug up a wellspring of truth which the regime feared might one day produce unpredictable consequences. They feared Solzhenitsyn because they realized that the crust of lies they have built around us is very fragile. As long as it seals off completely the entire society, it appears to be made of stone. But the moment someone breaks through in one place, when one person cries out, 'The king has no clothes!' then everything suddenly appears in another light and the whole system can suddenly find itself on the verge of disintegrating."

Vaclav Havel, Czechoslovak writer and dissident, The Power of the Powerless, essay written in 1978 and distributed as an underground publication in Soviet bloc countries

unit 8 questions

20. The passage can best be used to illustrate which of the following developments in the 1970s and 1980s?

(A) The way in which squabbles among party leaders and intraparty power rivalries gradually undermined the legitimacy of communist regimes in Eastern Europe

(B) The way in which the mobilization of society during the Cold War gave people in Eastern Europe the strength to endure economic hardships

(C) The way in which the liberalization of Soviet policies following the death of Stalin allowed people in the Eastern bloc to express a wide variety of opinions and viewpoints

(D) The way in which government efforts to suppress criticism and restrict freedom of speech proved ineffective in stemming public discontent within communist regimes ✓

Answer D

Correct. Communist regimes in Eastern Europe did attempt to stifle critiques and free speech, even with military crackdowns such as that in Hungary in 1956 and in Czechoslovakia following the Prague Spring in 1968. However, they were never able to stop all dissent, and by the 1970s and 1980s more people within communist states were expressing discontent publicly.

21. As expressed in the passage, Havel's vision of effecting change in the communist bloc was most consistent with which of the following developments?

(A) State-led programs to increase press freedom and provide greater transparency on past and present political decisions, such as Gorbachev's glasnost policies

(B) Market-oriented measures to stimulate private initiative and make state-run plants and factories more competitive, such as Deng Xiaoping's economic reforms in China

(C) Grassroots citizens' organizations forming to protest the economic and social injustices in the Communist bloc, such as the Solidarity labor union in Poland ✓

(D) Violent disintegration of states deemed illegitimate or artificially created, such as the collapse of Yugoslavia

Answer C

Correct. Havel writes about change beginning with dissent at the level of individual thinking, which could then lead to public protest or a social movement. Grassroots citizens' organizations such as the Solidarity labor movement in Poland were examples of how dissent from individuals could provoke collective action that would form into a social movement to protest injustices and eventually lead to political change.

unit 8 questions

22. In addition to the factors exemplified by the passage, the end of the Cold War was also directly hastened by all of the following EXCEPT

(A) United States military and diplomatic pressure on the Soviet Union

(B) a deepening economic crisis as a result of a downturn in oil prices

(C) the signing of nuclear arms control treaties between the United States and the Soviet Union ✓

(D) the costly and ultimately unsuccessful Soviet invasion of Afghanistan

Answer C

Correct. Although the United States and the Soviet Union did sign nuclear arms control treaties in the 1970s and the 1980s, these treaties did not directly lead to the end of the Cold War. Since this option represents a factor that did not lead to the end of the Cold War, it is the correct answer to this question.

23. "Total war was no longer a rational option for enemies armed with nuclear weapons. If they were to fight each other, they could only do so in limited wars or through nonnuclear client states. Ironically, then, weapons of total destruction may have rendered total war between major powers obsolete in the late twentieth century."

Merry Wiesner-Hanks, world historian, 2004

Which of the following occurrences during the Cold War best supports the main contention of the passage above?

(A) Both the United States and the Soviet Union actively sought ways to neutralize each other's nuclear missiles.

(B) Both the United States and the Soviet Union armed and supported rival countries and factions in Africa, Asia, and Latin America. ✓

(C) A large movement protesting the nuclear arms buildup developed in Western Europe and the United States.

(D) Several nonaligned countries sought to obtain nuclear weapons technology.

unit 8 questions

"The Soviet structure of power is committed to the perfection of the dictatorship and to maintaining the concept that Russia is in a state of siege, with an enemy that lies just beyond the walls. This mentality has profound implications for Russia's international conduct. Moscow assumes that the aims of the capitalist world are antagonistic to the Soviet regime. However, the Kremlin is under no compulsion to accomplish its goal of spreading its influence in a hurry. If it finds unassailable barriers in its path, it accepts them and accommodates itself to them. There is no trace of any feeling in Soviet psychology that that goal must be reached at any given time.

In these circumstances it is clear that the main element of any United States policy toward the Soviet Union must be that of patient and vigilant containment of Russian expansive tendencies. Soviet economic development, while it can list certain formidable achievements, has been precariously spotty and uneven. It is difficult to see how the deficiencies of the Soviet economic system can be corrected by a tired and dispirited population working largely under the shadow of fear and compulsion. And as long as they are not overcome, Russia will remain an economically vulnerable and impotent nation, capable of exporting its ideological enthusiasm but unable to export real evidence of material power and prosperity. Indeed, it is the strong belief of this writer that Soviet power bears within it the seeds of its own decay, and that the sprouting of these seeds is well advanced."

George F. Kennan, United States diplomat to the Soviet Union from 1944 to 1946, article submitted anonymously to an academic journal devoted to the conduct of foreign policy, published in Washington, D.C., 1947

24. The recommendation provided in the second paragraph is best explained in the context of which of the following historical situations in the aftermath of the Second World War?

(A) The emergence of fascist states engaged in territorial expansion in Asia and Africa

(B) The implementation of genocidal policies by totalitarian states

(C) The creation of secret competing alliance systems by European powers

(D) The attempts by Soviet officials to establish ideological ties with newly independent states ✓

Answer D

Correct. At the time Kennan wrote in 1947, in the aftermath of the Second World War, the United States and the Soviet Union had emerged as the world's two superpowers, and both states were engaged in a global ideological struggle to spread their influence and power.

25. Which of the following best explains the purpose of the arguments expressed in the passage?

(A) To influence Soviet government officials to adopt economic policies that would harm the Soviet Union

(B) To influence United States government officials to adopt policies designed to avoid a major war ✓

(C) To convince world leaders to unite in order to stop the evils of communism

(D) To convince Soviet citizens that the United States meant them no harm in the hopes of creating a sustainable peace

unit 8 questions

Answer B

Correct. By publishing an article in a journal devoted to the conduct of foreign policy, Kennan was clearly attempting to advise government officials in the United States to take a certain policy approach—the containment of Soviet expansion—as part of a long-term strategy to outlast a Soviet Union that Kennan believes will eventually collapse from its own internal weaknesses.

26. Which of the following best explains how the historical circumstances of Kennan's service as a diplomat in the Soviet Union influenced his point of view regarding the "Soviet structure of power" in the first paragraph?

(A) He witnessed how the Soviet Union used its industrial capabilities to produce vastly more quantities of war equipment than Germany could produce.

(B) He witnessed how German atrocities had turned ethnic groups within the Soviet Union who had initially opposed Stalin against the Nazis.

(C) He witnessed how the Soviet Union's defeat of Nazi Germany allowed it to decide the fate of states in Eastern Europe that it occupied.

(D) He witnessed how conflict between Germany and the Soviet Union allowed Stalin to further centralize his power and use Russian nationalism to mobilize the population. ✓

Answer D

Correct. Stalin framed the Soviet Union's fight against Nazi Germany as a national fight to defend the motherland rather than as a communist fight against imperialism. Stalin's use of Russian nationalism helped to unify the population against the foreign enemy, and the needs of wartime management allowed Stalin to centralize his power at the same time. As a diplomat resident in Moscow, Kennan would have directly witnessed this process, and it likely strongly influenced his argument that the Soviet Union was dedicated to constantly perfecting its dictatorship and to maintaining the concept that Russia was in a state of siege.

"I assume that you, like any other sane man in this nuclear age, would not want to deliberately plunge the world into war, which could only result in catastrophic consequences to the whole world, including the aggressor.

At our [meetings], I made clear that because of the ideology to which you adhere, the United States could not tolerate any action on your part which in a major way disturbed the existing balance of power in the world.

I stated that if certain developments in Cuba[1] took place, the United States would do whatever must be done to protect its own security and that of its allies. Despite this, the rapid deployment of [Soviet] long-range missiles in Cuba has proceeded."

"I assure you that your conclusions regarding offensive weapons on Cuba are groundless. We have differences on ideological questions. But these must be solved on the basis of peaceful competition. The continued peaceful coexistence of the two different social-political systems now existing in the world is necessary to assure a stable peace.

We have received proposals [to avoid war] from the Acting Secretary General of the UN; I consider these proposals reasonable. You and I understand perfectly what terrible forces our countries possess."

1:In October 1962, the United States and the Soviet Union became involved in the Cuban missile crisis, caused by Soviet efforts to install nuclear missiles in Cuba.↩

27. Expensive military competition and proxy conflicts between the superpowers, such as the one referenced in the sources, contributed most directly to which of the following in the late twentieth century?

(A) The collapse of the Soviet Union ✓
(B) The rise of communism in Latin America
(C) The establishment of the United Nations
(D) The increasing isolationism of the United States

Answer A

Correct. The Soviet Union's collapse can be attributed to costly wars and lack of success in proxy conflicts with the United States and its allies.

unit 8 questions

28. The two sources best support which of the following claims?

(A) The Soviet Union planned to establish settler colonies on the island of Cuba.

(B) Both the United States and the Soviet Union attempted to join the Non-Aligned Movement.

(C) The Cold War superpowers were engaged in a power struggle involving postcolonial states. ✓

(D) The Soviet Union never placed any long-range missiles on Cuba's territory.

Answer C

Correct. The reference to "the existing balance of power in the world" along with the debate about Soviet ability to influence Cuba found in the sources indicates the United States and Soviet Union were engaged in a power struggle involving postcolonial states such as Cuba.

29. Kennedy's reference in Source 1 to the United States needing to protect "its own security and that of its allies" can be best understood in the context of which of the following?

(A) NAFTA was created as a free trade zone for Mexico, Canada, and the United States.

(B) During the Second World War, the United States joined an alliance against Nazi Germany.

(C) The Warsaw Pact included several of the Eastern and central European socialist states.

(D) During the Cold War, NATO policies were focused on the threats posed by the Soviet Union. ✓

Answer D

Correct. The United States and its allies were concerned with limiting the threats posed by the Soviet Union and the United States was a member of NATO when these letters were exchanged between Kennedy and Khrushchev.

30. The "two different social-political systems" referenced by Khrushchev in Source 2 were

(A) national socialism and constitutional monarchy

(B) democratic capitalism and communism ✓

(C) fascism and imperialism

(D) military dictatorship and theocratic republic

unit 8 questions

Answer B

Correct. The democracy of the United States and its allies and the communism of the Soviet Union and its allies were the two dominant social-political systems of the Cold War.

31. Which of the following best represents a point of view shared by both leaders?

(A) The United States should be able to place missiles on Cuba.

(B) Nuclear war would be devastating to both the Soviet Union and the United States. ✓

(C) Nuclear war between the Cold War superpowers was inevitable.

(D) A war would not affect the civilian populations of either the United States or the Soviet Union.

Answer B

Correct. Kennedy's discussion of war in the first paragraph of Source 1, along with Khrushchev's reference to the "terrible forces our countries possess," show that both sides were aware of the consequences of nuclear war.

"[TASS News Agency]: How is the United Nations Security Council decision on the rapid withdrawal of Belgian troops from the Congo being fulfilled?

[Patrice Lumumba]: Belgium has already proved that she has no respect for Security Council decisions. The Belgian government is continuing its aggressive actions and savage reprisals against our people who seek their independence from Belgian rule. These facts are not widely known in the world because the Belgian colonialists have got the press of other Western countries to write as little as possible about the actions of Belgian soldiers in the Congo.

[TASS News Agency]: What is the Congolese people's view of the Soviet Union's stand on the Congo's struggle to attain genuine independence and territorial integrity?

[Patrice Lumumba]: The Soviet Union was the only great power whose stand conformed to our people's will and desire. That is why the Soviet Union was the only great power that has all along been supporting the Congolese people's struggle with weapons and military advisors, while the West similarly supports Belgium. I should like to convey the heartfelt gratitude of the entire Congolese people to the Soviet people."

Patrice Lumumba, leader of Congolese independence movement, interview with the Soviet news agency TASS, July 1960

32. Which of the following most likely explains the Soviet Union's motivation for being involved in the Congo as described in the passage?

unit 8 questions

(A) It wanted to establish its own colonies to extract natural resources for its industrial factories.

(B) It wanted to take advantage of a regional conflict to expand its military power and ideological influence. ✓

(C) It wanted to expand its economic power by establishing free-trade agreements with dependent states.

(D) It wanted to promote greater stability in Third World countries by ending regional conflicts.

Answer B

Correct. The Soviet Union's desire to support the Congolese can most closely be attributed to its desire to expand its ideological and military influence, seen both through its supplying of arms and military advisors to the Congolese people and its desire to distinguish its actions from those of the West.

33. The level of military engagement between Western nations and the Soviet Union referred to in the passage is best explained by which of the following developments after the Second World War?

(A) The economic decline of communist states made it impossible for them to transport large armies to distant regions.

(B) The ability of the United Nations to send peace-keeping forces limited the scale of the involvement of major military powers in regional conflicts.

(C) The continued importance of resource-rich regions in Africa to economic development in the West and the Soviet Union discouraged them from engaging in large-scale conflicts that could cause vast destruction.

(D) The possession of nuclear weapons by the United States and the Soviet Union made it too dangerous for Western nations and the Soviet Union to engage in large-scale military conflict with each other. ✓

Answer D

Correct. Because both the Western powers and the Soviet Union possessed nuclear weapons, the principles of Mutually Assured Destruction ensured that the two sides avoided direct military conflict to prevent nuclear war. Instead, as indicated in this passage, the two sides challenged each other indirectly in other parts of the world, such as the Congo, through proxies.

34. Which of the following explains the most significant difference between the circumstances of military competition between Western nations and the Soviet Union in developing regions such as Africa and the circumstances of military competition between Western nations and the Soviet Union in Europe in the late twentieth century?

unit 8 questions

(A) Unlike in Africa, military competition between Western nations and the Soviet Union in Europe involved the establishment of rival military blocs. ✓

(B) Unlike in Europe, military competition between Western nations and the Soviet Union in Africa involved covert military actions by rival intelligence agencies.

(C) Unlike in Europe, military competition between Western nations and the Soviet Union in Africa involved the establishment of puppet regimes.

(D) Unlike in Africa, military competition between Western nations and the Soviet Union in Europe involved using political propaganda to weaken states.

Answer A

Correct. Military competition in Europe occurred within the framework of rival military blocs, namely, NATO and the Warsaw Pact. However, in developing regions such as Africa, no such military blocs existed. While some countries would become allied with either great power, competing, formal military alliances did not materialize.

"Article 1. The feudal marriage system, which is based on the superiority of man over woman, is abolished. The New Democratic marriage system is based on free choice of partners, on equal rights for both sexes, and on protection of the lawful interests of women and children. . . .

Article 3. Marriage shall be based on the complete willingness of the two parties.

Article 7. Husband and wife shall have equal status in the home. . . .

Article 8. Husband and wife are bound to love, respect, and assist each other, to engage in production, to care for the children, and to strive jointly for the building up of a new society.

Article 9. Husband and wife shall both have the right to free choice of occupation and free choice of participation in work or in social activities."

Marriage law from the People's Republic of China, 1950

35. The characterization of the traditional Chinese marriage system in Article 1 most likely reflects which of the following?

(A) Chinese nationalists' emphasis on the unity of Chinese territory

(B) The influence of Buddhist teachings on Chinese culture

(C) Chinese elites' adoption of Western gender norms following the Opium Wars

(D) The Marxist ideology of Mao Zedong's government in China ✓

unit 8 questions

Answer D

Correct. The first article's description of traditional Chinese marriages as "feudal" and the insistence on establishing a "New Democratic" marriage reflects how Chinese communists attempted to radically break from what they saw as backward traditions.

36. In 1949, NATO was established so that Western leaders could counter

(A) the perceived threat that the Soviet Union and its allies would spread communism ✓
(B) free-market advocates in the United States and Great Britain
(C) the decolonization of Africa and nationalization of Western industry there
(D) the growing power of developing countries in the United Nations

37. The founding North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) is best understood in the context of which of the following?

(A) The Cold War ✓
(B) The growth of a globalized economy
(C) The establishment of the Nonaligned Movement
(D) The post-Second World War population boom

NUMBER OF NUCLEAR BOMBS OR WARHEADS BY NATION, 1945 TO 2000

Year	United States	Russia or Soviet Union	Other Nations	Total
1945	2			2
1950	299	5		304
1955	2,422	200	10	2,632
1960	18,638	1,627	105	20,370
1965	31,139	6,144	308	37,591
1970	26,008	11,736	486	38,230
1975	27,519	19,235	888	47,642
1980	24,104	30,665	986	55,755
1985	23,368	38,582	974	62,924
1990	21,392	32,980	1,404	55,776
1995	10,904	18,179	1,031	30,114
2000	10,577	12,188	1,081	23,846

Data adapted from https://ourworldindata.org/nuclear-weapons.

38. The pattern in the numbers of nuclear weapons shown in the table between 1945 and 1985 is best understood in which of the following contexts?

(A) Decolonization of empires in Asia and Africa

(B) Competition between Western and communist powers ✓

(C) The second industrial revolution

(D) The outbreak of the Second World War

Answer B

Correct. Competition between Western and communist powers drove the proliferation of nuclear

unit 8 questions

weapons. As the table indicates, the United States and the Soviet Union, including Russia, competed throughout the Cold War period to amass a large stockpile of weapons.

39. The pattern in the numbers of nuclear weapons shown in the table after 1985 is best explained by which of the following?

(A) The spread of communism in Eastern Europe
(B) Proxy wars in Asia and Africa
(C) Globalization and the development of international economic unions
(D) The collapse of the Soviet Union and the end of the Cold War ✓

Answer D

Correct. The collapse of the Soviet Union and the end of the Cold War ended the arms race competition between the United States and the Soviet Union, as the latter ceased to exist after 1991. This development is reflected in the decrease in nuclear weapons proliferation during the 1990s, as shown in the table.

40. Changes in the overall number of nuclear weapons shown in the table contributed most directly to which of the following international developments?

(A) Revolutionary movements in colonized African countries
(B) Mass violence caused by ethnic or ideological conflicts
(C) Institutions investing in economic development in newly independent nations
(D) International efforts to promote peace and security ✓

Answer D

Correct. During the second half of the twentieth century, there were major international efforts to limit the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to decrease nuclear weapons stockpiles in order to increase international peace and security. The growth of nuclear stockpiles and the proliferation of nations with nuclear weapons contributed to international treaties from the 1960s to 1980s that tried to limit the spread of nuclear weapons.

41. Which of the following is the most serious limitation of the table as a source of information on the comparative military capabilities of nuclear powers?

unit 8 questions

(A) It does not include data on the total destructive power of the nuclear stockpiles of each nation. ✓

(B) It does not include data on the economic output (gross domestic product) of each nation.

(C) It does not include data on the number of people in each nation injured or killed by weapons of mass destruction.

(D) It does not include data on the average life expectancy of the population of each nation.

Answer A

Correct. One of the major limitations of the table is the lack of information about the total destructive power of the nuclear stockpiles of each nation. The numbers of nuclear weapons alone do not describe the destructive capacity of individual weapons or national stockpiles, which varied significantly. Information about the total destructive power of the nuclear stockpiles of each nation would allow for better context and comparative analysis.

42. The primary technology shown in the table contributed most directly to advances in which of the following areas?

(A) Internet and cellular communications

(B) Energy production ✓

(C) Medical vaccines and antibiotics

(D) Genetically modified agriculture

Answer B

Correct. Energy production was another major product of nuclear research and development, making significant contributions to basic scientific research as well as to the energy production of many nations.

unit 8 questions

The map above shows the territorial arrangements in South Asia that resulted from

(A) Akbar's expansion of the Mughal Empire

(B) rival Arab trading empires

(C) Dutch and Portuguese colonies

(D) partition at the time of decolonization ✓

(E) treaties with Russia and China

44. The partition of British India in 1947 created the new Muslim state of Pakistan and the predominantly Hindu state of India. The immediate result of the drawing of new geographic boundaries was

(A) a lasting nuclear nonproliferation pact between the newly created states

(B) religious and ethnic violence that led to mass migrations and massacres ✓

(C) a peaceful transition to independence along the lines that Mohandas Gandhi, the nationalist and advocate of nonviolence, had envisioned

(D) the peaceful annexation of Kashmir, a predominantly Muslim state, by Pakistan

unit 8 questions

"[El Diario]: Chairman, how does the Peruvian Communist Party sustain the huge party apparatus, including the People's Guerrilla Army?

[Chairman Gonzalo]: I think this question deserves a detailed explanation. Concerning the party, Chairman Mao teaches us—as did Marx, Lenin, and all the great Marxists—that the party is not a mass party, though it has a mass character. It has a mass character in the sense that while being a select organization—a selection of the best, of the proven, of those, as Stalin said, who have what it takes—being numerically small in proportion to the broad masses, the party defends the interests of the proletariat in taking responsibility for its emancipation, which can only come with communism. But since other classes that make up the people also participate in the revolution, the party defends their interests as well.

[El Diario]: Chairman, let's talk about the people's war now. What does violence mean to you?

[Chairman Gonzalo]: We see the problem of war this way: war has two aspects, destructive and constructive. Not to see it this way undermines the revolution—weakens it. From the moment the people take up arms to overthrow the old order, the reaction [state] seeks to crush, destroy, and annihilate the struggle, and it uses all the means at its disposal, including genocide. We have seen this in our country. We are seeing it now and will continue to see it until the outmoded Peruvian state is demolished."

Interview with "Chairman Gonzalo" [Manuel Rubén Abimael Guzmán Reynoso], leader of the Shining Path, a Peruvian revolutionary movement, 1988. The interview was conducted by the Peruvian newspaper El Diario, which was the unofficial newspaper of the Shining Path movement.

45. The views expressed by Chairman Gonzalo in the passage are best explained in the context of which of the following historical circumstances of the late twentieth century?

(A) The expansion of the military-industrial complex in Latin American states

(B) The rise of movements that challenged colonial rule in Latin America

(C) The rise of separatist movements that demanded regional autonomy

(D) The intensification of political conflicts between state and nonstate entities ✓

Answer D

Correct. Political conflicts between state and nonstate entities intensified significantly in Latin America during the 1970s and 1980s, with the Shining Path representing one of the most prominent examples.

46. Which of the following explains the most likely purpose of Gonzalo's answer to the second question in the interview?

(A) To call for the prosecution of those responsible for mass violence in Peru

(B) To challenge the continued political influence of Western states in Latin America

(C) To justify the Shining Path's use of violence to achieve its political objectives ✓

(D) To appeal to politicians in Latin American states to adopt reforms to their respective political institutions

unit 8 questions

Answer C

Correct. The most likely purpose of Gonzalo's answer is to justify the Shining Path's use of violence to achieve its political objectives, by establishing a distinction between what he considered to be illegitimate or destructive state violence and the revolutionary violence that he often described as both legitimate and constructive.

47. Which of the following would likely explain Gonzalo's theoretical discussion of the idea that "the party is not a mass party, though it has a mass character" during his answer to the first question?

(A) His intended audience was indigenous peoples in impoverished areas of Peru who fought for the Shining Path movement.

(B) His intended audience was leftist intellectuals in Latin America and other regions who sympathized with communist ideology. ✓

(C) His intended audience was liberal intellectuals in Latin American governments who knew little about the differences between Leninist and Maoist ideologies.

(D) His intended audience was criminal organizations in Peru that had agreed to help the Shining Path movement.

Answer B

Correct. Gonzalo's complicated and theoretical discussion of the idea that "the party is not a mass party, though it has a mass character" indicates that his likely audience would have been leftist intellectuals in Latin America and other regions who understood complex facets of communist ideology.

unit 8 questions

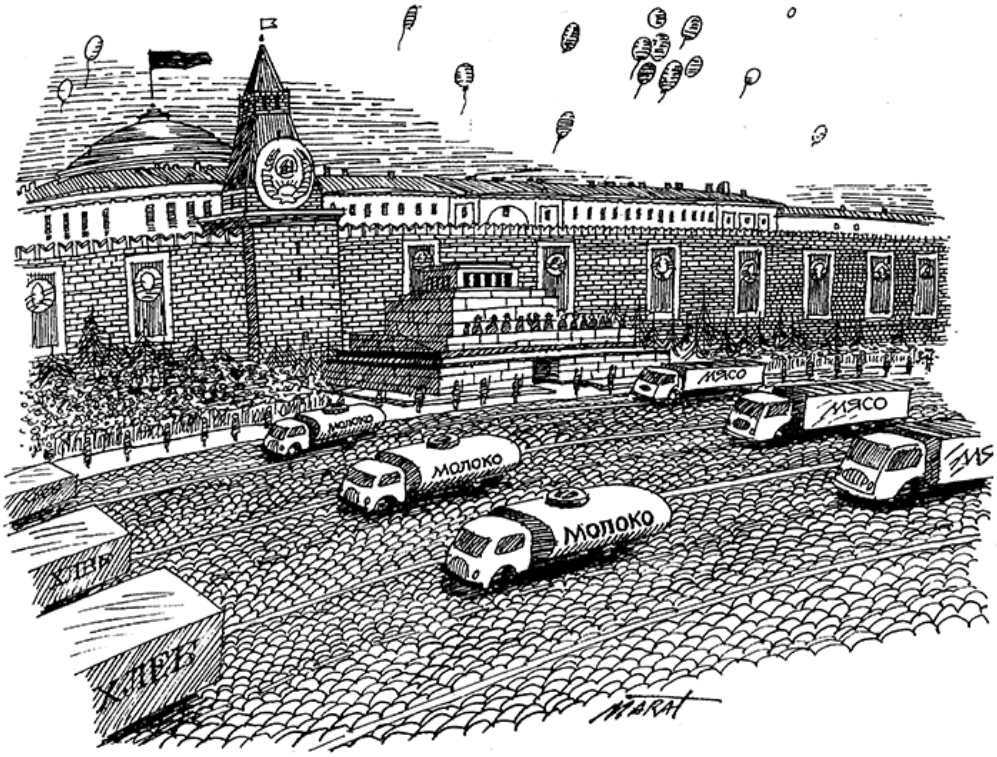
MARAT VALIAKHMETOV, SOVIET ARTIST, "PARADE," CARTOON PUBLISHED IN A SOVIET NEWSPAPER, 1989



The cartoon is a parody of Soviet military parades, with food trucks instead of tanks and military equipment. The trucks carry labels saying "BREAD," "MILK," and "MEAT"—all items for which the Soviet Union was experiencing frequent consumer shortages.

48. The depiction of the Soviet Union in the images is best explained as illustrating which of the following developments in late-twentieth-century communist states?

(A) Increasing instances of using force to quell political protests

(B) Rising ethnic nationalism

(C) Increasing political instability because of military coups

(D) Rising public discontent ✓

Answer D

Correct. The images directly illustrate rising discontent in communist states because both images are parodies of the military parades frequently conducted in Red Square in Moscow to demonstrate Soviet power. In the first image, the Soviet Union is portrayed as a "House of Cards" that could crumble at any

unit 8 questions

moment. In the second image, the military parades are mocked, as food trucks full of staple items that were frequently in short supply in the Soviet Union replace the tanks, missile launchers, and other military equipment that were typically included in the parades.

49. The inclusion of the trucks in Image 2 best helps explain which of the following developments in the Soviet Union in the late twentieth century?

(A) The recent collectivization of agriculture weakened the ability of Soviet farmers to compete with Western agricultural businesses.

(B) Although free-market reforms made the Soviet economy more efficient, climate change led to famines and crop failures.

(C) Despite the introduction of free-market reforms under the perestroika program, the Soviet Union's economy continued to deteriorate. ✓

(D) The increasing role of multinational corporations in the Soviet economy led to protests about growing economic inequality.

Answer C

Correct. The second image shows economic problems facing the Soviet Union in 1989, as it portrays trucks carrying basic food items such as milk, bread, and meat that were often in short supply in the Soviet Union during the late twentieth century and for which people often stood in line for hours to acquire. The cartoon was created during a time when Mikhail Gorbachev's perestroika program introduced free-market reforms that failed, for a variety of reasons, to prevent the Soviet economy from continuing to decline. Economic deterioration in the Soviet Union during the late twentieth century was a major reason that the Soviet Union collapsed in 1991.

50. Which of the following developments in the late twentieth century best explains why the type of power that Soviet leaders wished to highlight through the public event shown in Image 1 diminished?

(A) The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan was an expensive failure that helped prevent the Soviet military from closing growing technological gaps with the United States military. ✓

(B) Soviet suppression of uprisings in Eastern Europe weakened morale within the Soviet military.

(C) Soviet conflicts with communist China led to the loss of substantial territories in the east and signaled the end of Soviet leadership of the communist world.

(D) The Soviet Union lost tens of thousands of troops during proxy conflicts in Africa and Latin America.

unit 8 questions

Answer A

Correct. The Soviet war in Afghanistan lasted ten years, was costly, and drained the Soviet treasury. As the United States massively increased its defense budget and invested in high-tech military equipment such as stealth aircraft, the Soviet Union did not have the economic resources to modernize its military in a similar way and compete with the United States.

51. The changes in political status as depicted on the maps resulted most directly from which of the following?

unit 8 questions

(A) Migration of imperial subjects to metropoles

(B) Religious, ethnic, and regional movements challenging imperial rule ✓

(C) Land and resource redistribution movements advocating communism and socialism

(D) United Nations mandates ordering imperial states to grant their colonies independence

Answer B

Correct. The comparatively few British, French, or Portuguese territories or protectorates in Africa, the Middle East, and Asia in 1981 compared with 1930 reflects the results of religious, ethnic, and regional movements that challenged imperial rule and gained independence for most nation-states in these three regions.

52. The changes in the political status of the British territories and protectorates in South Asia as shown on the maps led most directly to which of the following?

(A) Proxy wars between former colonial powers

(B) Large-scale population displacements and transfers ✓

(C) The settling of territorial disputes by the League of Nations

(D) The creation of free-trade blocs

Answer B

Correct. With the end of British colonial rule in South Asia in 1947, religious and political conflicts led to large-scale population displacements and transfers and the establishment of the separate nations of India and Pakistan.

53. Which of the following most directly opposed the creation of the postcolonial political borders shown on Map 2 ?

(A) Transnational movements, such as Pan-Africanism ✓

(B) Regional trading blocs, such as the European Economic Community

(C) Military alliances, such as NATO

(D) Global international organizations, such as the United Nations

unit 8 questions

Answer A

Correct. Transnational movements, such as Pan-Africanism or the Pan-Arab movement, imagined a postcolonial landscape where national borders, which frequently reflected the arbitrary decisions of European colonial authorities, might be redrawn and new transnational identities could be emphasized.

In your response, you will be assessed on the following.

- Respond to the prompt with a historically defensible thesis or claim that establishes a line of reasoning.
- Describe a broader historical context relevant to the prompt.
- Support an argument in response to the prompt using at least four documents.
- Use at least one additional piece of specific historical evidence (beyond that found in the documents) relevant to an argument about the prompt.
- For at least two documents, explain how or why the document's point of view, purpose, historical situation, and/or audience is relevant to an argument.
- Demonstrate a complex understanding of a historical development related to the prompt through sophisticated argumentation and/or effective use of evidence.

"When it is an African uprising against tyranny and oppression, the imperialists call it 'terrorism'; but when it is White people taking up arms under similar conditions they call it a just cause. [For example], the recent Hungarian uprising* was universally praised as a just opposition against suppression, and the Hungarians who participated in it were christened "freedom fighters." But what the Russians did to the Hungarians that the "free" world made so much fuss about was the same thing that the British did in Kenya, and the French are doing in Algeria. . . .

It is high time that we be blunt and impartial in our condemnation of imperialism, regardless of which power is carrying it out. . . . We have no love for Russia and are not interested in the dirty business of Eastern-Western power bloc politics. But so many in the west are ready to accuse Russia of her brutalities, yet defend [Western] imperialism because, they claim, it is saving Africa from the "terrorism" of self-rule!"

"In your dispatch of August 18, you expressed the opinion that the Congo is experiencing a classic communist takeover* whether or not Lumumba himself is a Communist or just playing the Communist game to help him solidify his power. You state that there might be little time left in which to take action if we were to avoid another Cuba.

In high quarters here [in Washington], there is the clear-cut conclusion that as long as Lumumba continues to hold high office, the inevitable result will at best be chaos and at worst it would pave the way to Communist takeover of the Congo, with disastrous consequences for the U.S. and for the interests of the free world. Consequently, we conclude that [Lumumba's] removal must be an urgent and prime objective that should be a high priority of our covert action in the Congo."

"It is surely not by chance that the hand of Moscow is 'discovered,' in an almost stereotyped way, behind each demand for national independence put forth by a colonial people. This is because any difficulty that is put in the way of the supremacy of the West is seen as a threat to its economic power and its military interests .. . . .

The position taken by a few newly independent countries, which are determined to remain outside the policy of the superpower blocs, has introduced a new dimension into the balance of forces in the world. Adopting the so-called policy of positive neutralism, of non-dependence, of non-commitment, the underdeveloped countries that are awakening from a long slumber of slavery and of oppression are trying to remain outside of any warlike involvement, in order to devote themselves to the urgent economic tasks, to staving off hunger, to the improvement of man's lot."

Source: Viktor Bakin, Soviet diplomatic official in Poland, briefing to Polish officials on Soviet activities in Somalia, 1971.

"After the 1969 military coup in Somalia and the assumption of power of General Siad Barre's Revolutionary Council, many positive elements in Somali domestic and foreign policies can be observed. Therefore, the Soviet Union is planning to comprehensively activate its relations with that country, including the following activities undertaken so far. . .

In the economic field: The Soviet Union offered Somalia a long-term loan of 40 million rubles. . . The sending of additional Soviet specialists to Somalia was also agreed. Currently there are 111 Soviet specialists, outside the military field, in Somalia, including five professionals working in various Somali government departments. Thirty-two Soviet teachers and 18 Soviet doctors are planned to travel to Somalia this year. There are 350 Somalis, except those at military academies, currently studying in the Soviet Union.

In the military field: The Soviet Union also provides military assistance to Somalia. The Somali army, numbering 14,000 troops, is almost exclusively equipped with Soviet weaponry and is trained by Soviet military specialists. Somali staff officers are trained in the Soviet Union.

We seek to further promote relations with Somalia, and we hope that the other socialist countries, including Poland, will also develop their economic and political ties with that country. It would be desirable, therefore, to coordinate USSR's and the other socialist countries' activities in that regard."

Source: Janez Hocevar, Yugoslav ambassador to Somalia, report to the Yugoslav government, sent from Mogadishu, Somalia, 1975.

"Although many questions remain open as to the reason behind President Siad's recent invitation to the Americans to inspect the Soviet-built military facilities in the [Somali] port of Berbera,* I believe it was aimed at demonstrating to the world that Soviet-friendly Somalia can retain control over all of its military installations. This affirms the Somali policy of independence and nonalignment. President Siad might also intend to lessen Somali diplomatic isolation in order to engage with the Arab League, the Organization of African Unity, and other nonaligned countries.

The Soviet Union took advantage of the locals, building military complexes according to Soviet needs. This is taking a toll on Somalia's path toward true independence. The American inspections, although humiliating, are improving Somali-American relations. They hint at a possible future where the United States provides economic and humanitarian assistance in order to match Soviet influence. This would expand the Somali leadership's room for maneuvering."

*In the mid-1970s, the relationship between Siad Barre's government and the Soviet Union began to deteriorate because of Soviet unwillingness to back Somali claims over parts of neighboring Ethiopia.

"We are not a creation of the Soviet Union or Cuba; we are a creation of Zimbabwe. Our army is a manifestation of the nationalist desires of our people, a product of the history of our country. . . . It is true that the Soviets gave us aid, as did the entire international socialist community. ZAPU* trained militants in Cuba and, after 1967, and so did we. But though we trained cadres in the socialist countries, this did not transform our army into a Russian or Chinese army. Our war is supported by the progressive world. And it is true that our objective is the liquidation of imperialism and colonialism. But it is the Zimbabwean people who are fighting the war. No one can deny us the right to seek aid from our friends and allies.

54. Evaluate the extent to which African countries were able to conduct independent policies during the Cold War period.

PART A: THESIS/CLAIM

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the thesis must make a claim that responds to the prompt rather than restating or rephrasing the prompt. The thesis must consist of one or more sentences located in one place, either in the introduction or the conclusion.

The response responds to the prompt with a historically defensible thesis/claim that establishes a line of reasoning about the extent to which African countries were able to conduct independent policies during the Cold War period.

Examples that earn this point include:

· "Due to the competition between the Soviet Union and the United States during the Cold War, many African countries were able to play the two superpowers against each other in order to pursue policies that were in their own national interests." (includes a claim and introduces a line of reasoning evaluating the extent to which African countries were able to conduct independent policies during the Cold War period)

· "During the Cold War, newly independent nations in Africa found it difficult to avoid being drawn into proxy conflicts between the United States and the USSR. Nonetheless, many African countries managed to conduct independent policies by various means, including joining the Non-Aligned Movement, leveraging their strategic location or natural resources or, in some cases, playing off the superpowers against each other." (includes a claim and introduces a line of reasoning evaluating the extent to which African countries were able to conduct independent policies during the Cold War period)

· "Some African states were unable to have independent policies because of US or Soviet interference." (includes a minimally acceptable claim and a line of reasoning evaluating the extent to which African countries were able to conduct independent policies during the Cold War period)

PART B: CONTEXTUALIZATION

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must describe broader historical events, developments, or processes that occur before, during, or continue after the time frame of the question that are relevant to the topic of the prompt. To earn this point, the context provided must be more than a phrase or a reference.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary.

unit 8 questions

0	1 ✓

The response describes a broader historical context relevant to Cold War superpower rivalries in Africa, decolonization, effect of inherited colonial borders on African countries' political stability, challenges of African economic development post-independence, etc.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary. Examples of context might include the following, with appropriate elaboration:

· The legacy of European imperialism in Africa.

· The circumstances in which African countries gained independence after the Second World War

· Socialist and/or Communist ideology and its effects on African independence movements

· United States foreign policy shifting from isolationism in the 1930s to greater interventionism in the 1950s and 1960s as part of the "Domino Theory"

PART C1: EVIDENCE – USES THE CONTENT OF THE DOCUMENTS

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must accurately describe — rather than simply quote — the content from at least three of the documents.

0	1 ✓

The response uses the content of at least three documents to address the topic of the prompt. Must accurately describe—rather than simply quote—the content from at least three documents.

Documents used:

- ☐ Document 1: United States Committee on Un-American Activities' Communist influence map
- ☐ Document 2: Ghanaian newspaper's editorial on Western characterization of African anticolonial movements
- ☐ Document 3: Dulles's telegram to the CIA agent in the Congo
- ☐ Document 4: Fanon's, advice to African states from Toward the African Revolution
- ☐ Document 5: Bakin's briefing to Polish officials on Soviet assistance to Somalia
- ☐ Document 6: Hocevar's report to the Yugoslav government on Somalia accepting United States military inspections
- ☐ Document 7: Mugabe's interview with a Mozambique-based newspaper on Zimbabweans and foreign assistance

PART C2: EVIDENCE – SUPPORTS AN ARGUMENT USING DOCUMENTS

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must accurately describe—rather than simply quote—the content from at least four documents. In addition, the response must use the content of the documents to support an argument in response to the prompt.

The response supports an argument in response to the prompt using at least four documents.

Documents used:

- ☐ Document 1: United States Committee on Un-American Activities' Communist influence map
- ☐ Document 2: Ghanaian newspaper's editorial on Western characterization of African anticolonial movements
- ☐ Document 3: Dulles's telegram to the CIA agent in the Congo
- ☐ Document 4: Fanon's, advice to African states from Toward the African Revolution
- ☐ Document 5: Bakin's briefing to Polish officials on Soviet assistance to Somalia
- ☐ Document 6: Hocevar's report to the Yugoslav government on Somalia accepting United States military inspections
- ☐ Document 7: Mugabe's interview with a Mozambique-based newspaper on Zimbabweans and foreign assistance

Examples of evidence used to support an argument:

· (Document 3): "The CIA telegram to its agent in Congo provides direct instructions that a democratically elected African leader needs to be removed because he 'is a Communist or just playing the Communist game.' This shows that when an African state tried to have policies that the US strongly disapproved of, the US was willing to take extreme measure to prevent them from doing so."

· (Document 6): "The Yugoslav ambassador to Somalia observed how the Somali government opened up to contacts with the United States, even though it had also received significant Soviet military and economic aid. The Somali government was clearly trying to gain aid from both the United States and the USSR, which shows how African countries could balance the superpowers against each other and pursue their own independent policies."

PART C3: EVIDENCE - EVIDENCE BEYOND THE DOCUMENTS

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must describe the evidence and must use more than a phrase or reference. This additional piece of evidence must be different from the evidence used to earn the point for contextualization. The point for evidence beyond the documents may be awarded for evidence that appears in any part of the response.

unit 8 questions

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary.

0	1 ✓

The response uses at least one additional piece of the specific historical evidence (beyond that found in the documents) relevant to an argument about the prompt.

· This additional piece of evidence must be different from the evidence used to earn the point for contextualization. Typically, statements credited as contextualization will be more general statements that place an argument or a significant portion of it in a broader context.

· Statements credited as supporting evidence beyond the documents will typically be more specific details that function as support for a particular point made in an argument, analogous to the function of evidence drawn from the documents.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary. Evidence beyond the documents might include the following, with appropriate elaboration:

· Specific African countries (other than those mentioned in the documents) allying themselves with the Communist Bloc – Egypt during Nasser's presidency, Angola, Mozambique, Libya, Ethiopia

· Specific African countries (other than those mentioned in the documents) allying themselves with the West – Zaire during Mobutu's presidency, Kenya, South Africa

· African conflicts that became Cold War proxy conflicts (other than those mentioned in the documents) – Angola civil War, Algerian War of Independence, Ogaden (Ethiopian-Somali) War, Biafra war, Chad-Libya war, Suez Crisis, etc.

· African countries and/or leaders active in the Non-Aligned movement – Egypt (Nasser), Ghana (Nkrumah), Tanzania (Nyerere), etc.

· Post-independence movements for economic and political integration of African countries – Pan-Africanism, East African Community, etc.

PART D1: ANALYSIS AND REASONING - SOURCING

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must explain how or why (rather than simply identifying) the document's point of view, purpose, historical situation, or audience is relevant to an argument about the prompt for each of the two documents sourced.

0	1 ✓

The response explains how or why the documents' point of view, purpose, historical situation, and/or audience is relevant to an argument about the prompt for at least two of the documents.

- [ ] Document 6: Hocevar's report to the Yugoslav government on Somalia accepting United States military inspections
- [ ] Document 7: Mugabe's interview with a Mozambique-based newspaper on Zimbabweans and foreign assistance

Examples of sourcing a document:

· (Document 3): "As the director of the CIA, Allen Dulles must have had access to the highest levels of US foreign policy making and strategy. His support for the CIA trying to overturn the Lumumba government in the Congo clearly shows that the US was determined to all it could to stop the spread of communism in Africa."

· (Document 7): "Because this is an interview with a newspaper from a friendly African country (Mozambique), Mugabe emphasizes that ZANU is a homegrown African independence movement and downplays the importance of the support his group has received from the Soviet Union, China, or Cuba."

· (Document 6): "The report by the Yugoslav ambassador to Somalia is probably a reliable account of the situation in that country, not only because diplomats are usually expected to report faithfully to their governments but also because Yugoslavia itself was not a member of either the communist or the capitalist bloc. As such, a Yugoslav diplomat would probably not have been under pressure to present the situation in Somalia through an ideological perspective."

PART D2: ANALYSIS AND REASONING - COMPLEXITY

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must demonstrate a complex understanding.

A response may demonstrate a complex understanding through sophisticated argumentation that is relevant to the prompt. This may be done in a variety of ways, such as:

· Explaining multiple themes or perspectives to explore complexity or nuance; OR

· Explaining multiple causes or effects, multiple similarities or differences, or multiple continuities or changes; OR

· Explaining both cause and effect, both similarity and difference, or both continuity and change; OR

· Explaining relevant and insightful connections within and across periods or geographical areas. These connections should clearly relate to an argument that responds to the prompt.

A response may demonstrate a complex understanding through effective use of evidence relevant to an argument that addresses the prompt. This may be done in a variety of ways, such as:

· Effectively using seven documents to support an argument that responds to the prompt; OR

· Explaining how the point of view, purpose, historical situation, and/or audience of at least four documents supports an argument that responds to the prompt; OR

unit 8 questions

· Using documents and evidence beyond the documents effectively to demonstrate a sophisticated understanding of different perspectives relevant to the prompt.

This understanding must be part of the argument, not merely a phrase or reference.

While it is not necessary for this complex understanding to be woven throughout the response, it must be more than merely a phrase or reference.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary.

0	1 ✓

The response demonstrates a complex understanding of the historical development that is the focus of the prompt, through sophisticated argumentation and/or effective use of evidence.

Examples of demonstrating a complex understanding might include:

· Explaining the nuance of an issue by analyzing multiple variables, such as exploring different aspects of the relationship African countries and the Cold War superpowers or blocs

· Analyzing multiple variables by constructing an argument that explores the complexity of the international situation during the Cold War period and relating that complexity to African countries' ability to pursue independent policies.

· Explaining relevant and insightful connections across time and space, such as constructing an argument that explains how the situation of African countries in the context of the Cold War had similarities or differences to the situation of nineteenth-century African countries or leaders (for example, independent Ethiopia or Muhammad Ali's Egypt) in the context of nineteenth-century imperialism and/or Great Power international politics.

· Confirming the validity of an argument by corroborating multiple perspectives, such as by explaining how, despite the different political views and priorities expressed in the documents, several of them agree that African states could conduct independent policies by strategically making on breaking alliances with one superpower bloc or the other.

· Qualifying or modifying an argument by considering diverse or alternative views or evidence, such as by discussing how the ideological perspectives of several documents create imitations in answering the question posed in the prompt.

In your response, you will be assessed on the following.

- Respond to the prompt with a historically defensible thesis or claim that establishes a line of reasoning.
- Describe a broader historical context relevant to the prompt.
- Support an argument in response to the prompt using at least two pieces of specific and relevant evidence.
- Use historical reasoning (e.g., comparison, causation, continuity or change) to frame or structure an argument that addresses the prompt.
- Demonstrate a complex understanding of a historical development related to the prompt through sophisticated argumentation and/or effective use of evidence.

unit 8 questions

55. In the twentieth century, conflicts such as the two world wars and the Cold War occurred on a global scale. Develop an argument that evaluates the extent to which global conflicts led to cultural or social changes during this period.

PART A: THESIS/CLAIM

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the thesis must make a claim that responds to the prompt, rather than merely restating or rephrasing the prompt. The thesis must consist of one or more sentences located in one place, either in the introduction or the conclusion.

The response responds to the prompt with a historically defensible thesis/claim that establishes a line of reasoning about the extent to which twentieth century global conflicts led to cultural or social changes.

Scoring Note: The thesis does not have to mention multiple states or conflicts.

Examples that earn this point include the following:

· "Global conflicts led to only minimal degrees of social and cultural change in the twentieth century because men remained politically, and economically dominant and Western culture became increasingly dominant globally."

· "The global conflicts of the twentieth century created the conditions for social change through total war, which transformed the way many societies viewed things like women working for a living, governments providing welfare benefits, or Europeans controlling the lives of non-European people through imperialism."

· "Although there were major global conflicts in the twentieth century, they were not the primary cause of social and cultural change, which instead was more the result of long-term demographic and technological developments."

· "The First World War led to huge social change because it led to the communist Revolution in Russia."

PART B: CONTEXTUALIZATION

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must describe broader historical events, developments, or processes that occur before, during, or continue after the time frame of the question that are relevant to the topic of the prompt. To earn this point, the context provided must be more than a phrase or a reference.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary.

0	✓ 1

unit 8 questions

The response describes a broader historical context relevant to global conflicts or social or cultural change in the twentieth century.

Examples of context might include the following, provided the essay clearly connects them to the prompt:

· The growth of Marxist ideology

· The expansion of European empires

· The women's rights and suffrage movements

· Consumerism and capitalism

· The Industrial Revolution

· The growth of new media

· The persistence of religious and other cultural beliefs

· European empires' mobilization of their colonies during global conflicts

PART C1: EVIDENCE - PROVIDES EVIDENCE

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn one point, the response must identify at least two specific pieces of evidence relevant to the topic of the prompt.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary.

0	1 ✓

The response provides at least two specific historical examples of evidence relevant to the topic of the prompt.

Examples of evidence used might include the following:

· The mobilization of women as factory workers

· Expansion of welfare measures as a result of wartime mobilization

· Anti-war protest movements

· The Holocaust

· Decolonization

· The Bolshevik Revolution

· Mao Zedong

unit 8 questions

· Nuclear arms race

· Proxy wars in Asia and Africa

PART C2: EVIDENCE - USES EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT AN ARGUMENT

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must use at least two pieces of specific and relevant evidence to support an argument in response to the prompt.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary.

0	1 ✓

The response supports an argument in response to the prompt using at least two pieces of specific and relevant evidence.

An example of evidence used to support an argument:

· "The devastation of the First and Second World wars introduced social change by encouraging governments to become more heavily involved in shaping national economies and societies. For example, after the Second World War, the British and French governments created national health services to provide free health care to all of their citizens while many other states adopted tax policies that transferred wealth from the highest income groups to the lower classes."

· "Technological development was more important than the World Wars in spreading cultural change around the world. For instance, the development of television was far more important in spreading American culture across the world than the outcome of the Second World War."

Examples of evidence used might include the following, provided the essay uses the examples in support of an argument about the prompt:

· The mobilization of women as factory workers

· The Holocaust

· Decolonization

· The Bolshevik Revolution

· Mao Zedong

· Nuclear arms race

· Proxy wars in Asia and Africa

PART D1: USES HISTORICAL REASONING

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

unit 8 questions

To earn the point, the response must demonstrate the use of historical reasoning to frame or structure an argument, although the reasoning might be uneven or imbalanced, or the evidence may be overly general or lacking specificity.

0	1 ✓

The response uses historical reasoning (e.g. comparison, causation, continuity and change) to frame or structure an argument that addresses the prompt

Examples of using historical reasoning to frame or structure an argument might include the following, with appropriate elaboration:

· Explaining how, as European states broke under the strain of the First World War; communists such as Lenin found an opportunity to advance their ideology.

· Explaining how, during the Cold War, each side pushed its ideological perspective on newly independent states, leading to proxy wars and civil conflicts, as well as the Non-Aligned movement.

· Explaining how, because of the World Wars and the genocides that were committed during them, racial ideology was challenged.

PART D2: ANALYSIS AND REASONING - COMPLEXITY

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

A response may demonstrate a complex understanding through sophisticated argumentation that is relevant to the prompt. This may be done in a variety of ways, such as:

· Explaining multiple themes or perspectives to explore complexity or nuance; OR

· Explaining multiple causes or effects, multiple similarities or differences, or multiple continuities or changes; OR

· Explaining both cause and effect, both similarity and difference, or both continuity and change; OR

· Explaining relevant and insightful connections within and across periods or geographical areas. These connections should clearly relate to an argument that responds to the prompt.

A response may demonstrate a complex understanding through effective use of evidence relevant to an argument that addresses the prompt. This may be done in a variety of ways, such as:

· Explaining how multiple pieces of evidence (at least four) support a nuanced or complex argument that responds to the prompt; OR

· Using evidence effectively to demonstrate a sophisticated understanding of different perspectives relevant to the prompt.

This demonstration of a complex understanding must be part of the argument and may be demonstrated in any part of the response.

While it is not necessary for this complex understanding to be woven throughout the response, it must be more than merely a phrase or reference.

The response demonstrates a complex understanding of the historical development that is the focus of the prompt, through sophisticated argumentation and/or effective use of evidence.

☐ Demonstrating a complex understanding might include the following, with appropriate elaboration:

· Explaining the nuance of an issue by analyzing multiple variables, such as the different effects of global conflicts in different parts of the world on social or cultural change

· Explaining both continuity and change, such as social or cultural continuities and changes in society after the World Wars

· Explaining relevant and insightful connections within and across periods by linking the global conflicts of the twentieth century with earlier conflicts such as the Seven Years' War or the wars of the French Revolution and Napoleon

· Confirming the validity of an argument by corroborating multiple perspectives, such as considering the differing effects Marxist thought had on social structures in different parts of the world

· Qualifying or modifying an argument by considering diverse or alternative views or evidence, such as arguing that there were varying degrees of change across the world based on local conditions and the direct effects of the global conflicts on different areas

56. In your response, you will be assessed on the following.

- Respond to the prompt with a historically defensible thesis or claim that establishes a line of reasoning.
- Describe a broader historical context relevant to the prompt.
- Support an argument in response to the prompt using at least two pieces of specific and relevant evidence.
- Use historical reasoning (e.g., comparison, causation, continuity or change over time) to frame or structure an argument that addresses the prompt.
- Demonstrate a complex understanding of a historical development related to the prompt through sophisticated argumentation and/or effective use of evidence.

In the period after 1900, the role of the state in the economy varied, with many states adopting policies to control or manage their economies.

Develop an argument that evaluates the extent to which one or more states controlled their economies in this time period.

PART A: THESIS/CLAIM

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the thesis must make a claim that responds to the prompt, rather than merely restating or rephrasing the prompt. The thesis must consist of one or more sentences located in one place, either in the introduction or the conclusion.

The response responds to the prompt with a historically defensible thesis/claim that establishes a line of reasoning about the extent to which one or more states controlled their economies in the period after 1900.

Scoring Note: The thesis is not required to encompass the entire period, but must identify a relevant development or developments in the period.

Examples that earn this point include:

· "The twentieth century included several examples of states controlling their economies, the most famous being that of the Soviet Union, which used Marxist ideology to justify its nationalization of industry and introduction of centralized economic planning."

· "While some states after 1900, such as communist Russia and China, exercised great control over their economies, the United States and many Western European coutries believed in implementing more free-market policies."

· "In recent years, many countries rejected the idea of trying to control their economies and embraced free-market capitalism."

PART B: CONTEXTUALIZATION

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must describe broader historical events, developments, or processes that occur before, during, or continue after the time frame of the question that are relevant to the topic of the prompt. To earn this point, the context provided must be more than a phrase or a reference.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary.

The response describes a broader historical context relevant to the development of states and economic policy in the period after 1900.

Examples of acceptable contextualization:

· "World War I upset the global political and economic order and led to the establishment of new totalitarian states."

PART C1: EVIDENCE - PROVIDES EVIDENCE

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

unit 8 questions

To earn this point, the response must identify at least two specific historical examples relevant to the topic of the prompt.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary.

0	1 ✓

The response provides specific examples of evidence relevant to the topic of the prompt

Examples of acceptable evidence used might include the following:

· "Mao Zedong's Great Leap Forward is one of the best examples of communist states controlling their economies."

PART C2: EVIDENCE - USES EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT AN ARGUMENT

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must use at least two specific historical examples to support an argument in response to the prompt.

The course framework often allows teachers the flexibility to select their own examples when teaching the course content. As a result, responses may vary.

0	1 ✓

The response supports an argument in response to the prompt using at least two pieces of specific and relevant evidence.

An example of evidence used to support an argument:

· "In early-twentieth-century Japan, the state attempted to control the economy indirectly, by supporting and partnering with large private companies called zaibatsu, which were given favorable tax rates and tariff protection in exchange for developing heavy industry, which the state needed for its military expansion. In Nazi Germany too, the government used indirect measures to control and direct the economy, the Nazis established close ties with leading German manufacturers and banks many of whom had lucrative government military contracts. In exchange for their cooperation, these companies and banks were given a free hand to deal with labor unions workers' demands."

Examples of evidence used might include the following:

· Communist states such as the Soviet Union and China exercised great control over their economies by collectivizing agriculture and Five-Year Plans.

· Fascist states (including Japan) in the interwar period developed corporatist economic policies where state officials and representatives of big business cooperated in guiding economic policy and setting production targets in some economic sectors, while preserving the basic structure of a capitalist economy.

unit 8 questions

· Partly in response to the two world wars and the Great Depression, many Western states also increased their level of intervention in the economy, by more actively promoting economic development projects, adopting some level of economic planning, and launching social welfare programs

· Beginning in the 1980s, the growing emphasis on neoliberal, free market economic policies led some countries, notably the United States and Great Britain to return to less interventionist economic policies.

· After decolonization, many newly independent states in Asia, Africa, and the Americas pursued interventionist (sometimes socialist) economic policies and attempted to guide their countries' economic development.

· Especially in the last decades of the twentieth century, international economic organizations such as the IMF and World Bank restricted some governments' ability to control their economies by imposing Western economic practices.

PART D1: USES HISTORICAL REASONING

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must demonstrate the use of historical reasoning to frame or structure an argument, although the reasoning might be uneven or imbalanced, or the evidence may be overly general or lacking specificity. .

The response uses historical reasoning (e.g. comparison, causation, continuity and change) to frame or structure an argument that addresses the prompt

Examples of using historical reasoning to frame or structure an argument might include the following, with appropriate elaboration:

· Explaining the role of ideologies and economic theories, such as Marxism, neoliberalism, or Keynesian economics in informing states' economic policies in the twentieth century

· Explaining the role of new technologies such as mass media or the Internet on states' ability to control or direct their economies

· Explaining the role of economic cycles in increasing or lowering the appeal of ideas and policies of government economic regulations

· Explaining the role of wars and wartime resource mobilization on governments' ability and/or willingness to regulate the national economy

PART D2: ANALYSIS AND REASONING - COMPLEXITY

Select a point value to view scoring criteria and/or examples, and to score the response.

To earn this point, the response must demonstrate a complex understanding.

A response may demonstrate a complex understanding through sophisticated argumentation that is relevant to the prompt. This may be done in a variety of ways, such as:

· Explaining multiple themes or perspectives to explore complexity or nuance; OR

unit 8 questions

· Explaining multiple causes or effects, multiple similarities or differences, or multiple continuities or changes; OR

· Explaining both cause and effect, both similarity and difference, or both continuity and change; OR

· Explaining relevant and insightful connections within and across periods or geographical areas. These connections should clearly relate to an argument that responds to the prompt.

A response may demonstrate a complex understanding through effective use of evidence relevant to an argument that addresses the prompt. This may be done in a variety of ways, such as:

· Explaining how multiple pieces of evidence (at least four) support a nuanced or complex argument that responds to the prompt; OR

· Using evidence effectively to demonstrate a sophisticated understanding of different perspectives relevant to the prompt.

This demonstration of a complex understanding must be part of the argument and may be demonstrated in any part of the response.

While it is not necessary for this complex understanding to be woven throughout the response, it must be more than merely a phrase or reference.

The response demonstrates a complex understanding of the historical development that is the focus of the prompt, using evidence to corroborate, qualify, or modify an argument that addresses the question

Examples of demonstrating a complex understanding might include:

· Explaining the nuance of an issue by analyzing multiple variables or by considering diverse or alternative perspectives or evidence, such as constructing an argument that discusses how economic globalization and the increasingly international nature of economic production and consumption is diminishing the importance of the nation state as an economic actor

· Qualifying or modifying the main argument of the essay to demonstrate awareness of historical complexity, such as constructing an argument that even states that attempted to control their economies completely sometimes relaxed their control and allowed some measure of private economic initiative (as seen in the examples of the NEP and perestroika policies in the Soviet Union or in China following the liberalization policies of Deng Xiaoping). Alternatively, even states that subscribe to free market economic principles sometimes adopt aspects of economic control (as seen in the examples of various wartime planning boards and the nationalization of many pension and medical insurance schemes in Western countries)

· Explaining relevant and insightful connections across time and space, such as explaining why the economic policies of the nineteenth centuries became discredited in the early twentieth century and then partly returned to favor in the late twentieth century
