Global Migration 1750-1900

Part I: Go to Immigrant Experience and complete the journey for Li Wei and then answer the following questions.

1. Why did Li Wei come to the Americas?

2. List 3 hardships he encountered:
   a.

   b.

   c.

Part II: Watch Argentina's Italian Bloodline Migration video clip and answer the following questions

Why did Italians go to Argentina?

How did they impact Argentina?

How does the Argentian Italian immigrant experience compare to Li Wei's Chinese American immigrant experience?

Part III: Push and Pull factors

Classify the reasons for migration (on next page) as either push or pull factors. Copy and paste the descriptions to the appropriate column.

Push factors	Pull factors

Reasons for Migration

Some South American governments paid for people from south and Southeast Asia to migrate to South America.	Pandemics of cholera broke out in Europe, Russia, London.

The northern reaches of Europe are famous for long, cold winters.	The government of Argentina invested heavily in schools during the 1860s.
The Great Hunger, a famine from 1845 to 1850, took the lives of up to one million Irish men, women, and children.	South Africa and the San Francisco area had abundant natural resources (precious metals), which could provide employment.
China, especially along the Pacific coast, experienced many years of famine and war (Taiping Rebellion) in the nineteenth century.	It was easy to move across the rolling hills along the California coast and the flatter terrain in the Central Valley.
South America offered safety to persecuted Catholics.	Australia had very few workers, so jobs could easily be obtained.
Gold was found in northern California (United States, 1849), New South Wales (Australia, 1851), and the Transvaal (South Africa, 1886).	People in West Africa sometimes kidnapped Africans and sold them into slavery.
The Trans-Siberian Railway connected Moscow to Vladivostok on the Pacific coast.	When Brazil outlawed slavery in 1888, thousands of new workers were needed for plantations.
British export laws flooded India with inexpensive cotton material; Indians had a difficult time affording a living.	Wages increased significantly in the industrial cities of North America and Europe, while income for rural workers rose very moderately.
Russia's "May Laws" of 1882 required Jewish people living in "The Pale of Settlement" (between the Baltic and Black seas) to live in specific communities and limited them to working in minor trades or as merchants.	Harbors at San Francisco (U.S.), Sydney (Australia), Valparaiso (Chile), Alexandria (Egypt), Rio de Janeiro (Brazil), Havana (Cuba) and Capetown (S.Africa) make it easier to move goods and people.
The Americas were perceived to be full of opportunities, wealth, and freedom.	Peace and improvements in public health practices led to an increasing population in Europe.
Germany, Russia, and Siam (modern-day Thailand) forced young men to serve in the army.	Industrial towns along the east coast of the United States grew very rapidly and experienced overcrowding, pollution, and epidemics.